Machrihanish has become well known mainly because of its exceptional first hole which requires the rounds opening shot to carry the Atlantic. It is a tough start, particularly into a breeze. The course is set in a wonderful dunes. In the small village of Machrihanish, which is situated on the western side of the remote Kintyre Peninsula: this is where the sky is big, the sunsets are dramatic and the air has been warmed by the Gulf Stream. The course is a joy to play, with its ups and downs of the fairways and the tussle with its undulating greens. There are also arresting views across to the Islands of Jura and Islay. It is a varied test for the competent golfer, the layout is not just a predictable nine out and nine back. The classic links holes – apart from the 1st – are the 5th, another par 4 with its fairway like and elephant's graveyard, the 10th, a clever dogleg par five and the 15th, a one shotted with real difficulty if the elusive green is missed from the tee.
